Respect essay

How does one define respect? Can respect be defined only through words? No, I think people show respect through actions. I like to live by the saying that if you show respect to others you will have it reciprocated, Or you could look at the actual definition. Webster's dictionary defines respect as a feeling of deep admiration for someone or something elicited by their abilities, qualities, or achievements. I feel that you could look at respect in many different views. Like one could southern people do things like how Southerners talk to their elders saying please&thank you Miss, ma'am, sir, etc which are visual terms of endearment for older people you respect. Or at least that's what I was taught, but fully look at respect and look at what I've been shown. I feel you could describe trust and respect in a close definition if you have trust in someone you can also have respect for them. If I trusted someone with my life I would say I have deep respect for them and their beliefs.

What are some of the examples of respect? If we search through the analogs of literature we will find many examples of it such as Sherlock and Watson or Sherlock and Moriarty. Sherlock and Watson have respect for each other even though sometimes Sherlock looks down at Watson for not having the same knowledge as him but he admires the knowledge that Watson does have in medical and military knowledge was Sherlock is more analytical and driven but you can even respect among enemies where Sherlock and Moriarty have mutual respect for each other because they have the same intellect and they're playing this cat and mouse game between each other testing themselves to see who will lack first. You can definitely see that there is different kinds of respect mutual, professional, persona, etc

We could also ask the question of is respect earned or given and how? I think both can earn people respect through acts of kindness and other things but I also think many people just give their respect to people and get stabbed in the back for it. I could give you a time when I gave someone respect and they got me into a bad situation with people I thought cared about me but I learned dont just give them your respect but that decision goes something i also stand for my gospel beliefs of treating people how Jesus would treat them and that has a strong hold on somethings I do in life I strive to be more like christ in the things i do.

How do we honor those that we respect? pulling back to a religious aspect for a minute I also have the philosophy of I want to be as Christ-like as I can be. So I always want to treat people the way I think Christ treats would treat them so respect is part of that and so I'll give respect to people that I don't think like on paper don't deserve the respect because that's between them and Jesus and how it's also between me and God as I treat so I think a lot about myself as the person who chooses to respect those you might not deserve it and when stretching out a hand like that you don't know how it will go in those Situations.

How does a community/country show respect to the people I would say they have to show respect to get the trust of the people to maybe vote them in to office or other positions in the community but that could tie back to my previous argument of is it gave or earned the peoples respect for them to get the position and how can they give the chance to earn the respect of them yes some may have to earn their respect and it takes time and effort to change someone's mind. As we look through respect and our community we can see that there's full respect and there's hollow respect of people promising things that they cannot fulfill and promises that they can keep newscast

But you also have the fact that respect has left this country. can we can't go back the good old days you could I'm not even after I mean cuz I tell you because Kane killed Abel at one point there was four people on the world on the earth and Cain killed 1/4 of the population you have a 33% chance of living one in four people died so there was never really a good old days anyways the lack of respect is growing in this country. You no longer have the handshake promises you have back alley deals you have hollow and broken promises, but you can show respect for your community. By respecting your community by cleaning up the parks, your neighborhood, volunteering, and helping those who are in need and if you've got spare clothing or food donate it to the food bank or the local shelters. Community service projects go help out or even better yet don't litter! You walk down the streets and people are walking down the same street side by side and yet you're supposed to move out of their way even though they're in your way. have respect for other people's rights for other people's personal space for other people's lives there's so much hatred and fear-mongering and just general lack of empathy that there is none to little respect left of this world and unfortunately a lot of people who used to be respected like Bill Cosby turns out he was complete liar. you know I mean his roofing women and attacking them and then he would standing up at graduations and telling black men to be good Fathers to be good members of society to respect their women and then going back to doing bad things in the shadows. respect is earned and it is lost but you can show respect to your community by doing many things and being somebody that people would respect and look up to

With all the things we talked about today I hope you can see my weird aspect of respect. Honestly, this was the hardest paper I had to write because I don't know what respect means to me. There's so many things that it could mean. Like I view it closely to trust. But Still It's a deep subject to talk about and I can understand why you guys picked it as one of the key pillars in the FCE program. After looking at this for months, it made me think deeply on what I believe in and what this means to me so thank you for the opportunity.
